Angelo Binaghi, President of the Italian Tennis and Padel Federation: "The Nitto ATP Finals have become one of the most important events on the international sporting calendar and are a source of great pride for Italian tennis. Once again this year the event is effectively sold out, a sign of extraordinary enthusiasm and participation. This edition will see Flavio Cobolli make his debut among the world's top eight players, while Simone Bolelli and Andrea Vavassori will once again feature in the doubles, having qualified as a team for the third year in a row. On top of this come the outstanding results of Sara Errani and Jasmine Paolini, who reached the semifinals of the FAGE WTA Finals, showing that our game continues to produce excellence in both the men's and women's tours. These achievements reflect the depth and quality that Italian tennis has reached. Thanks to the trust placed in us by the ATP, this edition also marks the start of a new cycle, which opens with major improvements to the venue and to the experience offered to the public. We want to keep growing the Finals, keeping them at the very top of world tennis and confirming Italy's ability to host world-class events, including in terms of reliability, longevity and the value they create for the region".

Andrea Gaudenzi, ATP Chairman: "The Nitto ATP Finals is the culmination of our season. Only the very best earn a place here, and the list of past champions speaks for itself. This year we also celebrate a new Year-End No.1 in Alexander Zverev, just the 20th player in history to achieve it. Six years in, Turin has proven itself an outstanding host for our most prestigious event, with a world-class atmosphere at the Inalpi Arena. I want to thank FITP, the Piedmont Region and the City of Turin, alongside Nitto and all our event partners, for their continued commitment. With Italy hosting the event until 2030, the future of our season finale has never looked stronger".

Stefano Lo Russo, Mayor of the City of Turin*: "The 2026 edition marks the start of a new cycle for the Nitto ATP Finals. Once again we looked at the previous edition and improved on it further. That is the strength of teamwork, which has allowed us, as institutions, to secure this sixth edition and the 2027 one, while keeping our sights on what is still our goal: hosting the Nitto ATP Finals in the city until 2030. Major sporting events generate economic activity, and they also play an important role in encouraging people to take up sport and embrace its positive values. The extraordinary numbers prove it: for the first time in Italy, the Italian Tennis and Padel Federation has more registered members than the football federation. The same is happening locally, where seeing the world's tennis champions up close has brought many young people to the sport".*

Alberto Cirio, President of the Piedmont Region: "I was here in the first year and I'm here today, six years on. I lived through the first edition, and I remember the Covid tests we had to carry out back then to create a safety bubble around the tournament. We have come a long way since then and learned a great deal. Hosting an event only makes sense if you can organise it over several years, because you improve year after year and the benefits become more tangible. Together with the City of Turin, we have made sure that the city changes a little every year, with everyone in mind. The secret of the Nitto ATP Finals' success is the tournament's ability to reinvent itself while thinking of everyone involved: the region, the City and the Region, the champions and hospitality, the sponsors, but above all the fans. Capacity has been increased, and even people without a ticket can enjoy the tournament first-hand, because the Fan Village has a court outside the Inalpi Arena where they can watch their favourite players. This is an event we believe in, and it makes Piemonte the italian Region with the most sporting events".

Andrea Abodi, Minister for Sport and Youth: "The Nitto ATP Finals and Turin are a well-established pairing, just like the one between top-level tennis and Italy, and the one between the Italian Tennis and Padel Federation and our company Sport e Salute, which work together on the organisation. This bond goes beyond sporting competition. It also highlights the significant public funding that the Government led by Giorgia Meloni has provided for years to a project that every year brings benefits to the city of Turin and to Piedmont, as well as to the rest of Italy. These resources for the organisation of the event have also produced savings of great symbolic value. To give just two examples, they make it possible to bring the Next Gen ATP Finals back to Italy, to be held in Reggio Calabria in a month's time, and to redevelop a large part of the Paolo Borsellino sports centre in Palermo for tennis. The centre stands directly opposite Via d'Amelio, where 'our' magistrate and the women and men of his security detail lost their lives in the Mafia bombing. The Finals are one of the most important tennis events of the year. At the same time, they bring together talent, the best of the local area and the involvement of the public, including those who follow the event on television and on international platforms. Today's successes also stem from this Government's investment in events, training, young people and the spread of sport. From 15 to 22 November, the Inalpi Arena will once again be the heart of world tennis: a chance to come together, get involved and share an extraordinary experience. Italy will once again be on court with a great and ambitious Flavio Cobolli and, in any case, at the centre of the world thanks to sport".

Tatsuya Akagi, Representative Director, President, and Chief Operating Officer (COO) di Nitto Denko Corporation: "It is a pleasure to be here in Turin for the opening of the Nitto ATP Finals. Since 2017, Nitto has been the title partner of this great tournament. Last year, we extended our partnership with the ATP through 2030. This partnership reflects what Nitto stands for. Like the players competing here, we believe in challenge, innovation, and connecting people. I would like to thank the ATP, FITP, the City of Turin, and all our partners for their support. We look forward to another great week at the Nitto ATP Finals".

Gian Maria Gros-Pietro, Presidente Intesa Sanpaolo: "For the sixth consecutive year, our Bank is the Host Partner of an event that represents not only a major sporting occasion, but also an important opportunity for growth and visibility for the local area. Sport embodies values such as commitment, merit, respect for the rules and continuous improvement – principles with which Intesa Sanpaolo fully identifies and which guide our daily work in serving people, businesses and communities. I wish the athletes, the organizers and all the fans an event full of excitement and hope that they will, once again, contribute to the success of Turin and Italy on the international stage".

WHAT'S NEW IN 2026 – With Turin confirmed as the official host city for 2027 as well, the Nitto ATP Finals are already introducing a new Master Plan for the 2026 edition, which thoroughly transforms the spaces of the Inalpi Arena and the Fan Village, bringing together sport, innovation, entertainment, sustainability, music and food in a premium experience for fans, partners and players.

The Fan Village becomes the beating heart of the event, thanks to a number of new structural features. Chief among them is the Skywalk designed by Pininfarina, an elevated walkway reserved for players that will link the Inalpi Arena to the Fan Village and is set to become one of the tournament's most iconic features. Piazza San Carlo will also take centre stage, with the traditional Blue Carpet enhanced by a new installation designed by Pininfarina, created to further strengthen the bond between the event and the city. The Fan Village will also be home to a new practice court with spectator viewing, allowing fans to watch the players up close as they prepare for their matches. Completing the project will be the new, enlarged façade of the Fan Village, featuring a giant LED wall that will turn Piazzale Grande Torino into a true digital stage.

Inside the Inalpi Arena, the new seating configuration will raise capacity to more than 13,500, while four new terraces overlooking the court and upgraded hospitality areas will offer an even more exclusive experience for partners, guests and companies.
